During this two-day workshop you will see real, local examples of improvement science in action. Our first day will begin in classrooms of sites from the Central Valley Networked Improvement Community (CVNIC) that apply continuous improvement. During Day 2, we will introduce lessons learned and helpful tools that can be applied to your continuous improvement work.

CVNIC for mathematics was launched in Fall 2016 and consists of school districts working together to improve mathematics learning experiences and achievement for students in Central California.

For the past three years, site teams comprised of teachers, coaches, and site and district leaders have come together from across the county to transform mathematical mindsets and learning in fifth-grade classrooms. Classrooms in the network have moved from performing at the county average to outperforming the rest of the region on CAASPP. Understand how creating routines for learning together through the lens of improvement science has been essential for our collective work.
